EICHMANN, AFTER MORE THAN THREE MONTHS AND 95 COURT SESSIONS: "YES, YOUR HONOR, I MUST DECLARE THAT I SAW IN THE MURDER OF JEWS, IN THE EXTERMINATION OF JEWS, ONE OF THE MOST HIDEOUS CRIMES IN THE HISTORY OF MANKIND"

Adolf Eichmann's admission of "human guilt" in the Nazi extermination of Jews marked a profoundly important turn at his trial in Jerusalem, at least in the psychological sense. It was a triumph for the Israeli Attorney General, Gideon Hausner, to have extracted this from the accused man at the outset of a cross-examination.

Eichmann's volunteered apology, which was the capstone of the defense at the conclusion of the direct examination, only skirted around the all-powerful phrase "human guilt", says the New York Herald Tribune. It dealt with "regret and condemnation" for the extermination, but seemed to hesitate over that word "guilt."

Even though Eichmann insisted on making a distinction between "human guilt," which he acknowledges feeling, and "legal guilt," which he does not admit, it was the "human guilt" that all Israelis wanted to hear.

Because, without an expression by the accused man of something concrete on this quality of human failure and remorse, nothing else Eichmann has been saying at his trial makes sense psychologically to the Jews of Israel, and probably of the world.

After all, it is felt that if Eichmann is willing to admit all that he does admit — implementing the transports which took Jews forcibly to the Nazi gas chambers — then he had better say something more than that he was just a little cog under the control of big wheels in the Nazi machine.

Eichmann was standing there in court in a glass cage, alert, aware, cornered probably as no man ever was cornered before — facing up to the moment of truth in a life difficult at best to contemplate.

Attorney General Hausner's outflung forefinger was pointing at Eichmann and Mr. Hausner's voice was rising to an emotional quiver as he spoke for all Jews, now living or dead in the holocaust.

"You, you, in your head, you, in your heart, do you find yourself guilty as an accomplice to the murder of millions of Jews — yes or no?" Mr. Hausner asked.

Eichmann did not cringe. He did not break. He replied thoughtfully, as it seemed, and without the unconscious arrogance he often displays. And he spoke clearly, though more softly than usual, when he said: "Yes, from the human point of view, yes". The least one can say is that he made the admission like a man, and thereby he seemed psychologically to change everything.

From the legal standpoint, too, the admission was of course of great importance, says the New York Herald Tribune. It is not for Eichmann to decide where human guilt and legal guilt begin and end, but rather for the judges.

Nearly a week later the trial of Adolf Eichmann reached a dramatic climax when the former Gestapo officer finally spoke the words Israelis wanted to hear from him: "I saw in the murder of Jews, in the extermination of Jews, one of the most hideous crimes in the history of mankind," Eichmann declared, says the New York Times. The crowd in the courtroom exhaled a great sigh. In the gallery spectators turned to each other and smiled.

A moment later Eichmann insisted he had had no executive power in the wartime slaughter of Jews by the Nazis.

What the audience wanted was not so much an admission of personal guilt from the pallid and broken Eichmann, who is charged with responsibility for the murder of millions of Jews, but the more general confession that was finally torn from him.

The confession was extracted not by the prosecutor but by the presiding judge, Moshe Landau. It came after Eichmann had cried out that he would have shot himself had he been forced to run a death camp as was his friend Rudolf Hoess, commandant of the Auschwitz camp in southern Poland. Hoess was hanged at Auschwitz after the war.

Eichmann said he did not want to shirk responsibility for his own role as director of transport in the annihilation program. He begged his Israeli judges:

"After the trial I should be allowed to write a book to explain things, to call a spade a spade." He used the German expression, "Das Kind beim Namen Nennen." — To call a child by its right name.

Judge Landau leaned forward and spoke softly to the accused:

"It is your duty to say here all the things you would write in that book. You said you want to call a child by its right name — this you must do here exactly as you would in that book."

Eichmann leaped to his feet, stood rigidly at attention and faced the Israeli judges with his customary deference.

"Yes, your honor," he said gravely, "after you call on me to give a clear answer I must declare that I saw in the murder of Jews, in the extermination of Jews, one of the most hideous crimes in the history of mankind."

It had taken ninety-five sittings of the court, spread over more than three months, to reach this critical moment, says the New York Times. Judge Benjamin Halevi demanded: "This is what you think now. What did you think then?"

"This is a question that lies in the realm of individual feeling," Eichmann replied. "When I saw for the first time dead Jews I was utterly shattered. This ghastly sight has never left me and had a permanent impact on my nerves. It has haunted me all the time.

"But I was compelled — I was in the iron grip of orders to continue my assignment, in spite of what my eyes had seen. Several times I asked to be transferred to other work.

"Up to now I have not expressed myself so clearly because I feared my words would be misinterpreted. I was afraid people would think I was doing it to find an excuse and to influence the final verdict here by means of prevarication.

"Whatever my sentence here may be," Eichmann continued with feeling, "I am aiming at telling the truth and the whole truth. In conclusion let me point out that already at that time I saw in this violent solution of the Jewish problem something illegal, something hideous and heinous. But unfortunately I was compelled to do what I did as a result of my oath of allegiance and loyalty. I had to deal with the transport technicalities, on orders from my superiors."

"But did you regard it as a crime?" Judge Halevi persisted.

Eichmann replied that in his "heart of hearts" he transferred the guilt to his superiors. Thus he found peace of mind.

"I regarded myself as not guilty," he declared, "and I was glad I had no direct share in the physical extermination of Jews. The part that I had to play was quite enough, anyway."

Eichmann's confession came on the fifth day of cross-examination. He had confessed — during the opening barrage of Attorney General Gideon Hausner to some moral guilt for his personal role, says the New York Times, but he had never referred to the slaughter of Jews with anything stronger than slight distaste.

Mr. Hausner got nowhere trying to prove that Eichmann's Jewish Affairs Section of the Gestapo supplied the gas used to murder Jews at Auschwitz and other death camps. When Mr. Hausner cited documents showing that Eichmann's chief aide, Maj. Rolf Guenther, dealt with the supplying of cyanide gas, Eichmann insisted that Heinrich Mueller, chief of the Gestapo, must have given the special assignment to Guenther secretly.

Eichmann said he had not learned of this assignment until 1944. He then reproached Guenther for getting the Jewish affairs section mixed up in a matter beyond its scope, Eichmann asserted. Mr. Hausner rejected the explanation as "senseless."

Eichmann replied in a tired tone: "Do you want me to invent answers? If so I am prepared to admit prior knowledge about all this. I have admitted so much of my own free will that this cannot make much difference."

Mr. Hausner got Eichmann talking about loyalty.

"When did you cease being a National Socialist?" he asked.

"Gradually," Eichmann replied. "After the collapse of Germany I changed my outlook on life. This did not happen over night. It was a gradual development, with all the ups and downs and vicissitudes. I was hesitating and shilly-shallying until an entirely new world outlook was lined in my mind, until I found gratification."

"Well, then," cried Mr. Hausner, "why had Eichmann signed a photograph 'S.S. obersturmbannfuehrer, retired' in 1957?" This was Eichmann's rank, equivalent to lieutenant colonel, in the elite guard.

There was a roar of laughter when Eichmann, flustered, responded: "I do not know whether I signed it or not, but it is my writing."

Eichmann drew himself up to full height and drummed his fingers indignantly on his desk when asked to explain why he had once told his Gestapo chief that 100,000 Germans ought to be lined up against a wall and shot, says the New York Times. He said he had meant that in the early days of the war the Reich was full of traitors and that Germany should clean its Augean stables before dealing with the Jews.

"I was shattered by what I had read about espionage and treason in the files that were piling up on my desk," he declared. "I thought we had no right to judge others before we judged ourselves."

Pursuing the loyalty theme, Attorney General Hausner questioned Eichmann about notes he had written in the margin of a book while living in Argentina. The book, "The Last Days of the Reich Chancellery," by Gerhard Bolt, a former German officer, was critical of Hitler.

Eichmann acknowledged he had written "Lump" (scoundrel) opposite Bolt's name and also such observations as "the author should have been skinned alive" and "because of such filthy scoundrels we lost the war." Eichmann thought it frivolous that he should be questioned on this matter. Anyone who read the book would reach the same conclusion, he said with indignation.

"A man who swears allegiance to the flag and then violates the oath is nothing but a scoundrel in my opinion," Eichmann declared. "A breach of an oath is the worst crime a man can commit."

Mr. Hausner, as if he had awaited this, snapped: "A bigger crime than the murder of 6,000,000 Jews including 1,500,000 Jewish babies?"

"No, of course not," Eichmann replied. "But I never dealt with exterminations. If I had been ordered to do so I believe I would have shot myself."

Mr. Hausner asked Eichmann sharply whether he regarded Hoess, the Auschwitz chief, and others engaged in extermination as criminals. Eichmann responded that Hoess had been "an unhappy man, an unfortunate man."

"That was not my question," Mr. Hausner scolded, flapping his arms. "What did you think of Hoess when you saw him butchering Jews? Did you regard him as a criminal or not?"

"This is a strictly personal question," Eichmann protested, says the New York Times. "What I did not say before I am not going to say now. I have the answer in my heart, but I shall not reveal it to anyone."

"No, no, you have to reply!" cried Mr. Hausner. "How did you regard Hoess when you saw him murdering Jews?"

It was one of the most stirring scenes in the trial. Mr. Hausner had abandoned his earlier histrionic manner and his high-pitched heckling of the witness, says the New York Herald Tribune. Instead he was contenting himself with a toned down though still severe manner toward the prisoner. And he was plying his questions in a most effective way.

Eichmann was getting angry at the things that Mr. Hausner was bringing up against him: The damaging testimony of the Auschwitz-Birkenau Commander Rudolf Hoess in 1947 depicting Eichmann as a man obsessed with exterminating the Jews, and the reckless statements which Eichmann was supposed to have made in the tape recording sessions in Argentina in 1957 for the Dutch journalist, Wilhelm Sassen.

Mr. Hausner finally got the prisoner making extravagant statements about the sanctity of the Nazi oaths. When Eichmann said that he regards the violation of oaths of loyalty as the greatest crime that a man can possibly perpetrate, that was too much.

First, the prosecutor moved in to ask if he considered it a greater crime than the murder of six million Jews, including a million and a half children, and then the tribunal itself gave a hand to Mr. Hausner when Eichmann got stubborn.

But when he began to open up, leaping to his feet after each question was put to him, speaking a rapid-fire German, bending eagerly forward toward the microphones in his prisoner's dock to give his answers, he seemed to give an impression of sincerity to outsiders.

Later in the session, Eichmann was questioned closely about the marking of Jews with the yellow badges and other identifying insignia. He admitted that whatever the ostensible reason for these indignities, it made the job for SS (Nazi Elite Guard) police officers a great deal easier.

The prosecutor led up to the guilt testimony in a carefully laid series of steps which brought Eichmann up to the point of giving his view of the sacredness of an oath. He was testifying about the marginal note he had written in a book by a German author who had criticized Hitler. He explained:

"This is in my opinion a man who had sworn his allegiance to the flag. If he violated this oath he was a base and vile scoundrel."

Then Eichmann was slowly pulled into the channel where Mr. Hausner wanted him, says the New York Herald Tribune. He continued: "The same thing is true here. I have sworn to tell the truth. I always weigh every word I have said and every evening I examine myself and I ask myself whether I told the whole truth."

Judge Benjamin Halevi, the most relentless of the three judges but at the same time the most gentle in manner, intervened here with a question:

"Do you think that a man who takes an oath of loyalty — this oath of loyalty of which you speak — is ever exempt of this oath, and free of it, after Hitler's death?"

"After Hitler's death everybody of course who had ever pledged allegiance to him is released from this oath of loyalty," the accused man answered.

"And this includes you?"

"Yes, I, too, am free from this oath."

"Were those who engaged in extermination criminals?" Mr. Hausner asked. The prisoner said such persons were "unhappy men, unfortunate men."

The prosecutor pressed on. Did Eichmann think persons were criminals — yes or no?

"I dare not answer this question because I have never been confronted with such a state of affairs," he replied.

The Attorney General slammed a series of questions at Eichmann about Rudolf Hoess, his friend and the later-executed commandant of the Auschwitz-Birkenau extermination camp, the greatest death facility ever created. Eichmann tried to avoid direct answers.

"There are situations which bring a man to the brink of insanity," Eichmann added, says the New York Herald Tribune. "And there is another step when a man has to do away with himself under certain circumstances. But this is a matter of individual reaction to an individual situation. I can only say how I would have reacted to that particular situation, and I would have no right whatever to express myself with regard to others who had received such orders. Every one has to make a summing up for himself."

The trap still wouldn't spring closed for Mr. Hausner, so he tried another tack — this time asking Eichmann about a remark he once made in South America and repeated in the police interrogation to the effect that he would have shot his own father if ordered to do so because his father was a traitor.

Eichmann speculated that his father would have to be proved a traitor before he would obey such a shooting order.

Mr. Hausner demanded to know if the Jews had been proved to be traitors when "you exterminated them."

Someone called us up after reading our ad last week and said: "Gee, if all your musicians and entertainers are television stars the way you said, I'd die paying the bill."

All right then, we exaggerated just a little. Not ALL our entertainers are television performers, although nearly all of them know one end of a TV camera from t'other.

The girl who plays bass on a lot of our engagements is one of the Hames Sisters; Tommy Ambrose is one of our "regulars"; and if one of your kids is a jazz fan, he'll know Paul Hoffert.

The cost? We think we can give you a pleasant surprise there. Call us and see.

● HOLY BLOSSOM ● TEMPLE

Rabbi Abraham L. Feinberg, in September, 1959, requested the officers to seek a replacement, so that he would have the time to write a book, and for the Toronto Committee for Disarmament, and other pursuits. On May 17, 1961, Rabbi Feinberg was elected Rabbi Emeritus. The children of Rabbi and Mrs. Feinberg are Dr. Jonathan Feinberg, who is interning at the New Mount Sinai Hospital; and Mrs. Gershon Hugh Growe (Sarah Jane), 50 Walmer Road. Rabbi Feinberg has been Rabbi of Holy Blossom Temple for eighteen years. Rabbi W. Günther Plaut, of Mount Zion Synagogue, in St. Paul, Minn., where he served since 1948, accepted the invitation of the board of trustees to become senior rabbi. Born in Germany, he received the greater part of his education in that country, including courses at the Universities of Heidelberg, and Berlin. He received the L.L.B. degree from the University of Berlin, followed by the degree of Doctor of Jurisprudence in International Law, in 1934. During the second world war, Rabbi Plaut served with the 104th Infantry Division as United States Army chaplain in Belgium, Holland, and Germany. He was decorated with the Bronze Star Medal. He returned to the United States and entered the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, Ohio. After his graduation, he occupied the pulpit of Washington Boulevard Temple, in Chicago, Ill. Rabbi Plaut has been a contributing editor to the Universal Jewish Encyclopedia, and is the author of four books, including "The Jews Of Minnesota". He writes daily, and is preparing a book of commentary on the Book of Proverbs, which will be published shortly. In his personal library there are more than five thousand volumes. He is chairman of the Minnesota Governor's Committee on ethics, and of the St. Paul Coordinating Council on Middle Eastern and international affairs, and is a member of the Governor's Human Rights Commission. He conducts a weekly St. Paul television program, and has served as a board member of Neighbourhood House, Minnesota World Federalists, Boy Scouts of America, United Jewish Fund and Council, and the Association For Jewish Education. He is past-president of the St. Paul Gallery and School of Art. Dr. Plaut and Mrs. Plaut (Elizabeth) have two children, Jonathan, aged nineteen years, and Judith, fourteen. Mrs. Plaut is a member of Phi Beta Kappa Fraternity and holds the degrees of Bachelor of Arts; Bachelor of Education; Bachelor of Science; and Master of Arts, in Zoology, and has taught in high school, and college. Rabbi Plaut will assume his duties late in August. The board of trustees appointed Rabbi Jerald Bobrow as assistant. Rabbi Bobrow comes to Toronto from New York where he served Judea Reform Temple, at Valley Stream, Long Island, for four years, as student Rabbi; and was ordained at Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, in New York, this June. He was recently one of the four Rabbis who participated in the Freedom-Bus-Riders' Movement, in the Southern States. Rabbi and Mrs. Bobrow (Elly), will visit Israel this summer, and he will take up his duties early in September. Rabbi Bobrow holds a B.A. degree, with honours, from Brandeis University, in Waltham, Mass.; and an M.A. degree from Columbia University. He has done graduate work at the University of Boston, and in Israel, at the Hebrew University, has had practical experience as a teacher, and will work with the Religious School, and youth activities program, in addition to other duties.

The Geneva Conference Of The World Jewish Congress Will Plan For The Future

BY SAMUEL BRONFMAN, OF MONTREAL, CHAIRMAN OF THE NORTH AMERICAN EXECUTIVE OF THE WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS

In August of this year, about eighty representatives of all the major communities of Jewry will gather in Geneva for a four-day session of the global executive of the World Jewish Congress that will wind up with a celebration of the organization's founding in that same city exactly twenty-five years ago. The World Jewish Congress' agenda will span the globe, and of the issues with which the Jews are confronted, not least is the area of contact between the Jews of Israel and Jews whose homes are situated in many other lands.

I do not expect that our Geneva discussions will delve into the pros and cons of the debate of the relationship of Diaspora Jewry to Israel except to re-emphasize our traditional concept of developing unity and understanding between all Jews, no matter where they may live. Since it is deeply concerned with the welfare of the Jewish people everywhere, the World Jewish Congress seeks to give expression to the principle of organized unity of the Jewish people. Our concept of that unity is based upon our belief in its common destiny. We believe in the survival of the Jewish people both physically and spiritually. Physically, we must seek to protect their rights and security; spiritually, to preserve and create, to maintain and develop the Jewish heritage.

The World Jewish Congress represents many millions of Jews in the Diaspora, Jews in the United States who are American Jews; Jews in Britain who are British Jews; Jews in France who are French Jews; Jews in the Argentine who are Argentinian; Jews in Canada who are Canadian Jews. And Jews in Israel who are Israeli Jews. Thus do we represent Jews in sixty-four different countries. They are citizens in each of their respective countries, and they are all of the Jewish people. They participate to the full in the general life and work of their communities, and the better the understanding between the Jews and their non-Jewish fellow citizens, the greater the service they can render to the Jewish people.

The Jews in all the Diaspora lands have the greatest admiration for the accomplishments of the Jews in Israel. They have contributed, and will continue to contribute, their share in helping to bring immigrants to Israel, and through their investments help to re-establish these new Israeli citizens and bring prosperity to the nation.

There is a deep inter-relationship between the Diaspora and the State of Israel. The future of Israel will depend to a large extent on the understanding, the support, and the feelings of solidarity coming from the Diaspora, and the Jews of the Diaspora will derive spiritual inspiration and pride from the strength, the development, and the creative capacity of Israel. In addition, they are very proud of the place the State of Israel holds in the community of nations.

This inter-relationship requires the realization that there are mutual obligations and duties. This is a partnership vital to the survival of both the Jews in the Diaspora and the Jews of Israel. In the Diaspora the Jewish people must maintain their status of equality as good citizens in their respective countries, and at the same time adhere to their Jewish heritage. Here the responsibility of the World Jewish Congress is to better that understanding between the Jews and the other members of the communities in which they live.

These responsibilities, furthering better understanding between Jew and non-Jew; safeguarding the basic rights of the Jewish people; strengthening ties between Israel and the Diaspora, will be shouldered anew when the leadership of the World Jewish Congress, from all corners of the globe, gathers in Geneva in August to reflect upon the past, but, more important, to forge the future to serve the Jewish people. In doing so we shall strengthen the bonds between community and community, and develop an understanding of each other's problems that will serve each well in his own respective area.

EICHMANN, AFTER MORE THAN THREE MONTHS AND 95 COURT SESSIONS

Now the trap spring began to loosen a bit. Eichmann answered: "I had not exterminated Jews, but I do not want in any way to wangle my way out of responsibility and to shirk it in any way."

Now Presiding Judge Moshe Landau tripped the spring and the trap closed over Eichmann. The judge said:

"I wish to explain to you that it is your duty to say everything here which you would have written in that book, of which you are speaking."

Eichmann said: "When I saw for the first time dead Jews I was utterly shattered, and this ghastly sight has never left me and had a permanent impact on my nerves. It haunted me all the time. But I was compelled. I was in an iron grip of orders to continue my assignment, in spite of the facts that my eyes had seen.

"I have not expressed myself so clearly up to now because I feared that my words might be misconstrued, and I feared that one would think that as I am saying these things now, I am doing it in order to find an excuse and in order to influence the final verdict here by means of prevarication.

"This was not my intention. I am aiming at telling the truth and the whole truth, whatever my sentence here may be. In conclusion, let me point out that already then, I saw in this violent solution of the Jewish problem something illegal, something hideous and heinous. But unfortunately I was compelled to do so as a result of my oath of allegiance and loyalty. I had to deal with technical aspects of the problem."

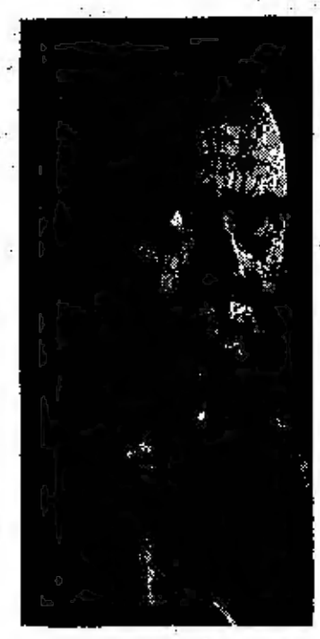
The effect of Eichmann's unburdening left spectators hushed, but now Eichmann was beginning to get over-articulate again, says the New York Herald Tribune. Judge Halevi intervened with another query:

"But my question was, did you regard it as a crime?"

Here Eichmann offered a rationale which seemed to fit perfectly with his entire address to history in this trial.

He testified: "Since the head of the state had ordered it, and my superiors had answered to these orders, I found some sort of cover, and I found some peace of mind as I transferred the onus of responsibility on to my superiors . . . I regard myself as not guilty, and I was glad that I had no direct share in the physical extermination of Jews. The part which I had to play was, anyway, quite enough."

Rasminsky, Montreal-Born Banking Expert, Is Expected To Give Distinguished Service Of Highest Importance As New Governor Of Bank Of Canada



Montreal-born Louis Rasminsky, aged fifty-three years, was appointed Governor of the Bank of Canada, replacing James E. Coyne, when the board of directors was given Cabinet approval of their choice, reported James Stewart, of the Ottawa Bureau of the Montreal Star.

Mr. Rasminsky, who has earned an outstanding international reputation in 21 years with the bank, also automatically becomes president of the Industrial Development Bank.

Commenting on the appointment, Prime Minister Diefenbaker said Mr. Rasminsky's seven-year term would date from July 24 and that his old position as a deputy governor would soon be filled.

Finance Minister Fleming said the appointment of Mr. Rasminsky will mark "a new period of relations between the bank and the government, and the bank and the people."

Mr. Fleming said Mr. Rasminsky has had "a very brilliant career" in international finance affairs.

"He will give very distinguished service to Canada in this most important office. I believe that Mr. Rasminsky will be a very strong governor of the bank and will render a service to Canada of the highest importance," he said.

The new governor, who earned his reputation in the international finance and foreign exchange field, has not been too closely associated with the domestic policies which wrought friction between Mr. Coyne and the government.

Though the announcement from the bank does not say so, Mr. Rasminsky's appointment is presumably for a term of seven years, during good behavior.

His international experience should be of value in guiding the Government's efforts to depress the value of the Canadian dollar. One of the most important features of Mr. Fleming's June 20 budget was his announcement of the Government's intention to reduce the Canadian dollar to a significant discount in relation to the U.S. dollar.

Mr. Rasminsky, born in Montreal in 1908, is an economics graduate from the University of Toronto and the London School of Economics. He joined the League of Nations in 1930 and became League specialist on monetary and financial questions.

In 1939, he was asked by Bank of Canada Governor Graham Towers to organize the economic and statistical section of the Foreign Exchange Control Board. He became assistant to the chairman of the board in 1941 and held the position of alternate chairman and chief executive officer from 1942 until the board ceased operations in 1951. He was executive assistant to Mr. Towers from 1943 to 1954.

Mr. Rasminsky was a top candidate for the job of Governor in 1954, but lost out to Mr. Coyne. He was appointed a deputy governor in 1955.

He has represented Canada on the executive board of the International Monetary Fund since its inception in 1946, and has been an executive director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development since 1950.

Only last week, Mr. Rasminsky attended an International Monetary Fund meeting in Washington, where he defended the Government's attempt to reduce the value of the Canadian dollar.

In 1944 he was a member of the Canadian delegation to the Bretton Woods financial and economic conference. There he was chairman of the drafting committee on the articles of agreement of the International Monetary Fund. He has been a member or advisor of Canadian delegations to almost every important international or Commonwealth conference on economic, financial, and trade matters.

In 1952, in London, he attended the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference and has attended every Commonwealth finance ministers' conference since 1949. He has also attended all meetings of the joint U.S.-Canada Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs since 1954, and all meetings of the Canada-U.K. continuing economic committee since 1947.

In 1946 Mr. Rasminsky was made a Commander of the Order of the British Empire. He received an honorary doctorate from the University of Toronto in 1953 and was made an Honorary Fellow of the London School of Economics in 1959.

Mr. Rasminsky is married to the former Miss Lyla Rotenberg, of Toronto, and they have two children, Michael, 24, an advanced medical student at Harvard University; and Lola, 17.

R. D. Muiholland, of Montreal, president of the Canadian Bankers' Association, assured Louis Rasminsky, new Governor of the Bank of Canada, of co-operation from the chartered banks. Mr. Mulholland, general manager of the Bank of Montreal, issued this statement:

"On behalf of the chartered banks of Canada, I congratulate Mr. Rasminsky upon his appointment as Governor of the Bank of Canada. Mr. Rasminsky's capabilities and long experience with the bank have won him the high regard of the Canadian commercial banking community. He enjoys a high reputation in the financial field abroad as well, and is considered by central bankers in other countries as one of the world's leading monetary authorities.

"The chartered banks of Canada have a tradition of co-operation with the Bank of Canada in matters concerning the best interests of Canada and Canadians, and, as Governor Rasminsky takes office, I would like to assure him of our continued co-operation in that regard. We look forward to working with him."

The appointment of Mr. Rasminsky, immediately, came eleven days after Mr. Coyne resigned. The Coyne affair exploded publicly a month before that as the embattled and embittered Governor fought Government charges that he had obstructed policy and embroiled the bank in political controversy.

His battle with Finance Ministry Fleming and the Government, fought in the glare of publicity, reached heights of heat and abuse unprecedented in previous Government relations with public officials.

Mr. Coyne fought with a barrage of published letters to the Finance Minister. The House of Commons passed a government bill declaring the post of governor vacant, without giving Mr. Coyne the committee hearing he demanded.

The Liberal-dominated Senate gave him that hearing, and after three days of powerful testimony, Mr. Coyne asked the Senate to defeat the bill and let him resign with honor. The Senate did, and Mr. Coyne resigned.

The New York Times says: At the time of Mr. Coyne's appointment nearly seven years ago, following the retirement of Graham Towers, many persons expected Mr. Rasminsky to be appointed Governor. It was widely believed at the time that he was passed over because he was Jewish. With this appointment Mr. Rasminsky has reached the highest government position ever had by a Jew in Canada.
